The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants in a medical negligence action, invoking judicial estoppel against the Plaintiff, Elizabeth "Beth" Harac, who had failed to schedule the claim as an asset in an intervening bankruptcy, and imposing defendants' proposed remedy by which any sums beyond those necessary to satisfy her creditors would be refunded to defendants. Ms. Harac submits that the trial court erred by concluding that it was required to invoke the equitable doctrine of judicial estoppel without regard to her prompt remedial actions and her subjective good faith, that its ruling is an unfair windfall to defendants, and that the Indiana bankruptcy court where the initial omission occurred was the proper forum to have considered and applied the doctrine of judicial estoppel to the facts.
